

Surrealist map of the world, reflecting the importance that André Breton and his group attached to Eskimo and Oceanic art. They were particularly attracted by large, complex Alaskan Eskimo masks, of which they purchased a considerable number in New York when they spent World War II in the United States.

From a special issue of Variétés (Brussels) entitled "Le Surréalisme en 1929" (Artist unknown)